For normal tests, I like to provide students the opportunity to work without fearing the clock. Tests can and should be doable within the designated class time. But often students don't want to be distracted by wondering about time. And often students like to have the luxury of having extra time with which to puzzle over problems that they get stuck on. For this reason, I like to give students the luxury of starting up to a half hour early or staying up to a half hour late. Unfortunately this requires places in which to work. Note: For the final exam there is no need for this, so we will start at the scheduled time.
