This is a non-thesis capstone class. In this class students will apply advanced research skills toward the completion of an academic presentation or publication in criminal justice, or a program evaluation, or a program plan for a criminal justice agency. The scope of the project and the number of course credits will be determined in consultation with a graduate advisor who has expertise in the field of interest. Students will complete an oral defense of their project to a committee of three professors on the graduate faculty. This course is repeatable for up to 8 credits.
